that the passenger service of the country is not self sustaining.

Mr. Thompson's opening shot is as follows: "Althought it is incapable of positive proof, it is probably a fact that the passenger traffic of the American railways is carried on at the expense of the freight traffic.

This statement has caused general dis-

This statement has caused general dis-This statement has caused general dis-cussion among passenger men, many of whom believe that they had outgrown the position of head of the "formamental branch of the service." By the latter appellation the passenger sorvice was known among freight mon for years. The passenger representatives have al-ways taken exception to it and have missing that the massenger hadness brings disted that the passenger business brings sisted that the passenger business brings in its fair proportion of railroad revenues. They also claim that freight men forgot the fact that it is the passenger business which advertises a railroad and that a shipper usually ships as he rides. Mr. Thompson, however, declares that, although it is impossible to demonstrate that the average passenger carnings of 2 cents per passenger mile, which the rousinow receive, do not cover the cost of operations, is sufficient justification for the assertion that the margin between the two is so small as to leave an inadequate sum for taxes, fixed charges and necessary renewals, to say nothing of dividends. Interesting statistics are given to show that this must be the case.

Mr. Thompson insists that, although the teresting statistics are given to show that this must be the case.

Mr. Thompson insists that, although the railroads have not received more than an average of 2.65 cents in passenger mile for eighteen years, it would not be be possible to adopt a maximum of 2 cents without forcing the railroads seriously; to cripple their service by reducing the number of trains, reducing the speed and curricalling special rates and special service may given the public.

One instance of the extraordinary expense to which railroads have been put of late to maintain such a service as the public demands is said to be track elegation in Chicago, which has cost $30,000 more. It is also shown that the cost of passenger locomotives has increased 104 per cent, and cars $2, baggage cars $3, wages of eighnen 13.5, of firemen 17.2, of conductors 16 and of trainmen 21 per cent.

The entire gross earnings of the passenger service, including mail and express, are convincing evidence that the passenger service including mail and express, are convincing evidence that the passenger trains, including earnings from mail, express earnings of the railroads. Figures are convincing evidence that the passenger trains, including earnings from mail, express, etc., exceeds the cost of operation by only $23,925,105.

This sum is could, he says, to slightly over 1 per cent, on one-third the funded the of the railways, with nothing left over for dividends upon an equal proportion of the stock.

It is only fair to say that Mr. Short has not hidden his talents in a napkin, but has even made more of the part than did his predecessor.

He belongs to that small band of comedians who are born and not made, even by the syndicate, for his humor and fath flows as naturally as "very extradry," and tickles like the laughing bubblies of a favorite, wine.

Miss Vera Michelenn, who sang "Bonitin," pretty, young and charming, possessed a voice that gives promise of heter things, for the clever dark-eyed prima donna who has not yet escaped the condines of her "teens," is to play "Carmen," another season (D. V.).

Miss Mae Bottl, as "Pepita," was a charming soubrette, certainly the equal of her sister, Rosa, from whom she inherited the part, and with a voice far and away superior.
